

WHY GARDEN?

Community gardens provide a welcoming environment where individuals can come together to cultivate not only plants but also relationships within the community. These green spaces serve as a hub for fostering a sense of pride and unity among community members, regardless of age, background, or ability.

By engaging in gardening activities side by side, people have the opportunity to learn from one another, share knowledge, and develop a deeper understanding of different cultures and perspectives. This collaborative effort not only enriches the community as a whole but also empowers individuals to connect with nature and each other in a meaningful way.

Moreover, community gardens serve as a platform for promoting sustainable practices that benefit the environment. From using organic gardening methods to implementing recycling and composting initiatives, these gardens encourage people to be conscious of their ecological footprint and take steps towards preserving our planet for future generations.

EDUCATION PLOTS

THREE SISTERS

The trio of corn, beans, and squash, known as the Three Sisters, has been integral to Native American agricultural and culinary practices for centuries. In this traditional method, corn stalks offer support for the beans to climb, beans enrich the soil with nitrogen, and squash leaves provide ground cover for moisture retention and weed control. This demonstration plot pays homage to the agricultural heritage of the Ho-Chunk people.

VICTORY GARDEN

During World War I and World War II, Victory gardens were vegetable, fruit, and herb gardens cultivated in private homes and public parks in the United States. These gardens were promoted by the government to enhance food supplies and uplift morale during the wars.

GET INVOLVED

GARDEN MAINTENANCE

The perimeter of the garden plots will need weeding from time to time. Shared gardening equipment may need maintenance over time.

BE A MENTOR

Mentors are needed to assist new gardeners at the community garden. Mentors can offer advice by phone or email or provide hands-on assistance

COORDINATE EVENTS

Future events will be planned at the community gardens. Leaders are needed for these events to organize dates, times, topics, and presenters.
